

Its Fame Will Live.

The World's Columbian Exposition marked the climax of human achievement. It will live in memory of the crowning glory of modern times. No other development of the closing century can compare with it in practical benefit to mankind.

Who that exhibited is not proud of it? Who that failed to exhibit does not regret the omission? The former are the people of to-day. The latter are relics of the past.

No honor so high as that embodied in an award at the fair. Competition was world-wide, the fruits of ripest experience and noblest endeavors were submitted for examination.

Honest tribunals, composed of eminent scientists, examined and passed upon the claims of exhibitors. Their judgement based on inquiry and justice, proves conclusively the value of any article they commend.

Their approval was stamped on

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

It received the highest award at the fair from a jury headed by the Chief Chemist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Dr. Price's was officially commended for highest leavening power, purity, keeping qualities and general excellence.

IN BOTKIN'S FAVOR.

Fruitless Efforts of Prohibitionists to Secure a Candidate

IN THIRD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Why Clemens' Name Was Omitted from Speech Making Assignments—Other Political News.

The party prohibitionists in the Third congressional district have a grievance against the secretary of their congressional committee.

When Rev. J. D. Botkin, who was a few years ago the prohibition candidate for governor, received the Populist nomination for congress in the Third district, the prohibition candidate, E. N. Hoover of Winfield, withdrew in the interest of Botkin.

A meeting of the congressional committee was called and Dr. W. S. Newlon of Columbus was selected as the congressional candidate to fill the vacancy caused by Hoover's withdrawal.

The secretary of the congressional committee was not at the meeting and he absolutely refused to certify the nomination papers of the new candidate, and by his refusal succeeded in keeping Newlon's name off the ticket.

The law requires the nomination papers filed with the secretary of state to have the signature of the chairman and secretary of the committee placing the candidates in nomination, and as Dr. Newlon's candidacy was not so certified, his name was not printed on the ticket. Judge J. R. Silver, the prohibition candidate for associate justice, says although Newlon's name is not printed on the ticket, he will receive a good vote, as the middle of the road prohibitionists will write his name on the ticket.

CLEMENS WAS SHUT OUT.

Why He Was Not Allowed to Make Speeches in the Campaign.

G. C. Clemens made a Populist speech at Osage City last night, the first he has made for some time. Like Achilles, Mr. Clemens has been sulking in his tent, the victim of base ingratitude. The general in command of the Populists, John W. Bredenthal, has neglected this veteran and though he was given appointments early in the campaign, as the battle waxed warm and the smoke thickened, he was entirely forgotten, intentionally or otherwise.

There were no bills printed upon which the name of G. C. Clemens appeared either in large or small letters.

The Populists arranged a meeting in North Topeka last week and the local committee waited on Clemens and invited him to speak. He had never refused before and the committee were astounded when he informed them that he would not speak. He said that if he was not considered of sufficient importance to be given a place on the program at large meetings, he did not intend to speak at meetings of any kind.

The friends of Mr. Clemens then called upon Mr. Bredenthal and protested against the treatment he was accorded by one of the original members of the party. Mr. Bredenthal would not listen to them at first, but after repeated protests had been made he consented to make appointments for him during the remainder of the campaign, and the speech last night was the first. He will speak tonight at Kansas City.

The objection made to Clemens was because of his radical views. The conservative members of the party fear he will say something which will leave the party open to attacks from its enemies.

TO ALL FLAMBEAU MEN.

Instructions and Directions for the Parade on Saturday Night.

To the Editor of the STATE JOURNAL: At the last business meeting of this club the desire was expressed by unanimous vote, that all associations in the county be their organization political or otherwise, join us in our efforts to make the demonstration to be held under the auspices of this organization Saturday, November 3, 1894, the most successful of the campaign, former prosperity and within the limited time to give a personal invitation to each, ask that you tender the same through the columns of your paper.

All organizations which accept this invitation are requested to notify A. L. Brooks, chief marshal, at headquarters of the county Republican committee, No. 415 Kansas avenue, prior to Thursday noon so that they may be assigned a place in the parades to take place in the afternoon and evening.

The time the columns will move, the positions of the various organizations in the formation of the parades, the line of march, and all necessary information will be given by the chief marshal through the papers in ample time. A very urgent request is made to all business men that they show their interest in, and desire that the state of Kansas regain its former prosperity and credit by properly decorating their houses and giving this demonstration the benefit of their personal influences. Yours very truly, L. G. BEAL, secretary.

AT MARCHES NO MORE.

The Railroad Men's Lantern Brigade Is Not a Street Parade.

The Republican lantern brigade has not turned out to parade with the flambeau clubs recently. As First Lieutenant George Adamson expresses it, "the club has busted up."

He says that he made a trip into the country last week, and when he returned he was told that the organization was no more. "The whole trouble with the club," he said, "is that the members won't turn out. They came out at one or two meetings, and since then we can't get them together. I think that the county central committee wasted money when they spent it for that purpose. It might have been better spent. As I understand it, the club is going to try to turn out again at the rally Saturday, but I don't know whether we can make it or not."

The lantern brigade was composed of forty members, all railroad men. Each member carried a lantern and executed drill movements. It was an innovation in political clubs, but did not take well with the members, who envied the members of the flambeaux, who carried flaming torches.

The officers were: John Mills, captain; George Adamson, first lieutenant; Leon Curdy, second lieutenant.

GOOD WORK GOES ON.

Suffragists Make an Impression on Packing House Men.

VISIT THE MEN AT THEIR WORK.

Some Amusing Incidents of the Day's Campaign.

If there should be a prize offered for hustling, the equal suffrage women in Topeka would surely get it. They are not contented with seeing voters in a body and if they cannot reach them in any other way they invade the workshops and business houses with smiles and tracts and arguments and make a man promise to vote for the amendment in spite of his screams.

It had been arranged and notices posted a few days ago on the doors of the Wolf packing house that there would be a suffrage meeting there yesterday noon, and that Albert Griffin would address it. Mr. Griffin was unable to be present and after a good deal of rushing around in the afternoon, A. H. Vance was prevailed on to take his place and Mrs. A. H. Case also agreed to talk some.

When twelve o'clock came the suffrage guard was on hand—Mrs. Vance, Mrs. Case, Mrs. W. D. Struble and Dr. Eva Harding—but the enemy was routed before the battle began. Of the eighty people employed at the packing house, at least seventy had more interest in satisfying the pangs of hunger than they had in considering the suffrage amendment. For this reason Mr. Vance put his speech in his pocket and went back up town.

The women were not so easily discouraged, however, and concluded to remain and distribute tracts, anyway.

Mrs. Case and Mrs. Struble accordingly took a handful of tracts each and started out. Dr. Harding preferred to remain by the fire in the office.

Although it was the noon hour there were several men at work, and the others soon began to come back, so that the time was not entirely lost.

"Have a tract," the women would say as though they were offering the men a cold lunch, "and read it when you get time."

The men always took them, and many of them expressed their entire willingness to vote for the amendment.

"I'll take your tract, but my wife would pull my hair if I should vote for you," said one man, whom the women hope was joking. "She is opposed to suffrage. If I were a young man I would vote for it, but I'm too old now."

"Why?" asked the women.

"Oh, because,"

"I will not vote it," said a German with a broad smile and a pair of greasy overalls.

"Oh, yes, you will. I like the Germans," said Mrs. Case in her most enticing manner.

"Nein, nein; you can't work me," replied the man.

Mrs. Struble, who is "some" German herself, here saw her glorious opportunity and said so many nice things to the man in his own mother tongue that he hesitated and was lost.

He has promised to vote for the amendment.

All through the greasy, smelly passage ways and rooms, between the vats and among the machines, as the men returned to their work a few at a time, and in the engine room the women went and distributed their silent speakers. The men took them and read them in part and put them away for future reference, some with smiles at the women's courage and some with serious faces.

"I ain't old enough to vote, but if talking 'll do any good I'm with ye all right," said a young looking man and the women beamed on him.

The women concluded they could meet the men on their way back from dinner now and they left the house and started up town well satisfied that their trip had been a profitable one. As they met men on the street they stopped them and gave them tracts and met many that promised to vote for the amendment before they left them.

Smoky Row was on the way back, but do you think it or its reputation bluffed the women? Not much. Into the groceries and hop tea joints they went and left their tracts.

In one place they were confronted by a colored man and asked how he proposed to suffrage because he voted enough for his wife; he had to earn the living, he owned the property they occupied, and he had to clothe the children and keep them in school.

You should have heard Mrs. Case settle that man.

"You know your wife earns her share of the living; she stays at home and keeps up your establishment, doesn't she?" said she as she shook a tract under his nose, which he took to get it out of the way.

"Yes, but—"

"If she did that, she owns her share of the property, doesn't she? She does her share in raising the children in her work for them."

"Yes, but—"

"Suppose you should die, who would vote for her then? Who would take care of her children—and yours? Who would have the right to vote for her to see that she and your children were properly governed and properly schooled? Who would—"

But the colored man had gone out into the back yard to kick himself for ever getting into the argument at all.

All along Smoky Row the good work went on, but when the Rock Island depot was reached the ranks were broken. Mrs. Case was suddenly confronted by a condition, not a theory. It was her husband's dinner time. So she handed her bunch of tracts to Dr. Harding and together she and Mrs. Struble distributed them on the depot platform and along the streets on their way up town.

"We must work the Kansas avenue bridge tomorrow at the noon hour," said Dr. Harding, "when the men are going and coming from dinner."

"I'll take one side. If you'll take the other," said Mrs. Struble, and so it was agreed.

BE CAREFUL WHAT YARDS.

Danger Lurks at Every Corner for Small Boys Tonight.

Tonight is Halloween, the night when Sarah Nade lifts up her voice in joyful tune and the small boys and also big ones go out in search of front gates and devilment.

The only way to be certain your gate will be where it should tomorrow morning is to lock it up in the barn or stand guard over it all night. The best way to save your gate is not to have any. A boy's idea of a mean man is one who guards his gate in ambush with a shotgun. A boy was once heard of who went out one crisp, chilly Halloween after gates and "found the gates ajar." The crowd extracted 137 separate and distinct shots from his anatomy in addition to three slugs and a piece of brick. This should be a warning to boys with more zeal than discretion.

There is another form of Halloween mischief that is neither bright nor humorous. It is turning up wooden culverts at street crossings. The culverts are city property, and there will be a lot of "extras" on tonight to protect them. After a culvert has been taken up once its usefulness is gone. It may be put back but it never fits again, and wobbles like a tight-rope. Judge Ensminger will give the boys who do this an exceedingly great jar.

There will be the usual number of parties and straw rides and jags tonight, and in the police court tomorrow there will be a long line of men who "didn't know they were loaded" till the police took them.

Go out, boys, and have a good time, but be careful what you do. There is plenty of legitimate fun at your disposal without doing those things that make the public rise up. Don't use anything stronger than dynamite and don't steal anything the value of which exceeds $10. Don't be too rude to a stranger, for he may be one of Chief Lindsey's specials, with a star on his coat and malice in his heart.
